FASHIONS AND FADS.

Wide lace is used again to encircle the armholes of a dress, often extending far enough into the dress to shape a lace collar.

A new correspondence paper has white or colored hemstitched borders, like handkerchief hems, and the paper is cross-barred like linen.

Hand-embroidered linen dresses, made with Dutch neck and trimmed with real Irish lace are among the newest and most expensive lines.

Fashion authorities declare that this season the separate waist must match in some feature the dress of which it temporarily forms a part.

A novelty in blouses is a handsome tailored leather one with chateaufort of the leather, from which swings an envelope bag of the same kind.

The latest lingerie touch is to have cherry ribbon bows fasten up the dainty garments instead of the old-fashioned baby blue and pale pink.

Some of the newest tailor-mades are severe in style, but they lack the old masculine hardness which made the styles of a decade ago so memorable.

The use of colored shoes has grown universal, especially for house and evening wear, and there are new soft shades, in grays, fawns, browns and white.

The costume of the season is incomplete without a wrap of some sort, no matter how slight it may be, and this has caused a renewed vogue for the scarf.

Spanish and Russian mantles are decidedly artistic, but they must be worn by a woman of height and slender figure.

Wrist bands which are a revival of the early Victorian headed bracelets have been introduced, and there is a threat of quite a revival of these trifles.

Cut jet promises to be the most fashionable thing in stones this season. It is found in brooches, watch chains, barrettes, hair combs and fancy hair ornaments.

Suits of silk, from the thick and heavy Shantung, which permit of insets or really handsome lace, to the lightest and thinnest of Japanese or glass, hold their own.

A number of pretty suits are made in colors and trimmed with bands of heavy ivory or ecrú lace instead of the lace to correspond with the color of the suit.

A new craze to wear with collared gowns is nothing less than a leather dog collar that takes the place of the broad band of ribbon allowable in the evening, but not in the morning.

For useful little runaround summer frocks, foulard and challies are perennially employed by persons who look to economical and comfortable questions rather than to being in advance of the mode.

Earliest advice as to fall hats are that they will be very large with trimmings of huge alpacas and enormous flowers.

In spite of contrariness expectations on this side of the water, Paris still insists that hats shall be large this autumn.

Artificial flowers are worn to some extent in the hair. The newest for this purpose are made of gauze and spangled with silver.

Sheer sleeves are mostly made with bands of the same material. It strengthens the sleeve, and they are less liable to pull out.

Entire gowns are now being made of sheer marabout, which first appeared as waists. They are prettiest trimmed with Irish lace.

The dress panel, which has been some what plain, is now cut, slashed, divided and made into numerous pretty effects below the waist line.

Among the few really artistic ideas that have marked late summer fashions is the band of ribbon tied around the hair with the bow on top.

Glenn Ballinger is to be worn. The rage for raffia shows no sign of abatement.

There is a Victorian tendency in evening costumes.

All sorts of black flowers are appearing in millinery.

Earrings have a great vogue on the other side of the water.

China silk waists will be worn until frost drives them out.

Wings trim many of the small hats for wear with tallcoats.

Dainty pink parasols are embroidered with flowers of lavender.

Medieval frocks apparently are leading back to the draped skirt.

Newest coat collars are large round affairs of Irish or Cluny lace.

The panner dress is coming back, to the dismay of the short women.

Ostrich feathers hold their own, but most of those now seen are curled.

Satin crapes, on account of their light weight, are the preferred hat facing.

Gowns worn everywhere show a great deal of embroidery, done with the coarsest threads.

Plain shoulders are already here, and full skirts are declared to be on the way.

It is predicted that ermine will be the premier fur when the Jack Frost season opens.

The waistline has come back to its proper position and is to be laced there rather than tightly.

Soutache has lost none of its favor, and is now often employed with floss for decorating gowns.

Canvas and ribbon belts, which are sold at a very low cost, are a great deal cooler than the others.

Hosiery colors this season are black, white, tan, blue, wisteria, taupe, bronze and American beauty.

Lace collars are noticeable for taffeta silk trimming, heavily touched in the same color as the lace.

A new pouce ribbon in dashy designs is intended not so much for hat decoration as for women's neckties.

A smart new slipper has vamps of colored leather, while the rest of the slipper and the heel are of white kid.

Fancy white jabots, inset with white lace are very pretty for the elderly woman to don with a dark lawn dress.

The half-around-the-head, barrette is a favorite decoration for young girls.

It is usually twined with colored ribbons.

The old sewing silk veils are a boon for the travelers and sojourners at the seashore. They do not wilt like chiffon.

Many eyelet embroidered batistes, sheer muslins and other transparent materials are seen, over white, black or a color.

Manufacturers are binding and slashing nearly all fine coats for next winter with fur.

A new motoring veil is of very pale gray, showing a wreath in it as large as a dinner plate with pink figures.

Some of the straight scarfs are made so deep that they are almost shawls, and the shaped ones are worn with the same idea.

Whatever the color scheme of a suit may be it is considered best to have the tie match the trimming of the hat in a tailored waiting costume.

Sprays of roses are placed upon the most unlikely points of hats, yet always in an artistic manner. Large and simple roses of all colors are used.

Gray is just now the correct color for all note paper, and when the monogram is used it is placed in the upper left hand corner instead of the middle.

The summer has found many dresses made extremely sheer, though not transparent. The sheerness is blurred, and is a far more modest arrangement than open work yokes.
